The Foundation for Financial Planning helps people take controls of their financial lives by connecting the financial planning community with people in need. We do this through program partnerships and grant opportunities that bring pro bono one-on-one financial planning to those that lack access to financial planning professionals.
Why Bring One-on-one Pro Bono Financial Planning To Your Community?

It offers personal, confidential sessions for those you serve!

Often financial issues need to be addressed in a confidential personal way. Public questions and answers after workshops do not provide the correct environment. This is where one-on-one financial planning sessions can benefit your community.

The Foundation for Financial Planning’s priority is to help cultivate these opportunities in local communities. We do this through program partnerships and grant opportunities that will bring one-on-one planning to those that lack access to financial planning professionals.

Please review these implementation tips and visit our website for additional information. We are ready to assist you with today. You may apply for a grant, but realize that you can get started on implementing financial planning sessions today!

Through our partners we will be able to assist you with locating financial planning professionals in your community and free neutral non-commercial financial educational materials. The Foundation for Financial Planning can connect you with planners that agree to a no-sales, no strings attached pro bono approach to serving the community in your area. The Foundation partners with these and other organizations:

- The Financial Planning Association (FPA) Chapter Pro Bono or Community Outreach Committees
- The National Association of Personal Financial Advisors (NAPFA)
- CERTIFIED FINANCIAL PLANNER™ (CFP) professionals

The following pages offers you some steps to bring one-on-one planning to your area and organization.
The Foundation’s program and grant priorities are to reach adult underserved populations through the utilization of local pro bono financial planners to provide confidential one-on-one financial planning.

A model based on one-on-one financial planning is the Financial Planning Days initiative. Local Organizations such as libraries, colleges, and non-profits organizations create opportunities that connect pro bono financial planning professionals with their constituents.

Remember everyone has personal sensitive financial questions and needs a financial plan.

Use quotes:

“Thank you so much for setting us up with a pro bono planner. We are really excited to work with the planner. This is way better than doing the online budgeting. We were doing well but the planner wants us to get out of debt, and gave us some great skills and confidence in doing so. The Planner was really great!!!”

“We met with our planner today. The meeting was inspiring, informative, and provided insight for us to initiate an outline and action plan for financial goals. The information was taken to heart and highlighted the need for us to constantly seek out continued education in an effort to keep up and understand the financial world. We also now understand the importance of communication when developing our short, intermediate, and long term goals. We are planning to use the guidance during the development of a more in depth outline of financial goals and with the intent of presenting the plan in a hopeful meeting with our financial planner again in the near future.”

“Your organization has once again provided an opportunity for us to take actions that will affect our family as a whole. Especially by making and setting up the connection with our financial planner, who is an exemplary example of the true Hero’s within our communities across the U.S. that volunteer time for a complete stranger. His time and effort towards volunteerism is an unbelievable act of kindness and it is hard for us to put in words how thankful and grateful we are. Thank you for making this opportunity happen.”
